Cybercrime Update Breakfast
Tuesday 31 May 2016, Auckland

Our two presenters will cover the following issues around cybercrime:

- insights into the evolving cyber security threat in New Zealand
- as a nation, are we getting any better at managing cyber security risk?
- cyber security risk and the four lines of defense: IT, people, contracts and resilience
- the legal risks from poor cyber security risk management
- risks specific to directors and senior executives
- what Boards/Senior executives can do to help manage those risks
- key questions we should be asking within our own organisations to ensure that we have robust security in place

Presenters

Briony Davies – Special Counsel, Minter Ellison Rudd Watts Lawyers

Briony is an experienced advisor and advocate in public law and commercial litigation and regulatory matters. She has significant experience advising New Zealand and overseas based entities across a range of sectors on their privacy, confidentiality and data sharing and protection obligations. Her expertise includes privacy risk management, data sharing and protection, and cyber security risk management and crisis response.

Briony regularly assists clients to manage the complex intersections between central government, business growth and regulation. She has advised clients across the government and corporate sectors on managing and minimising legal and related risk, and navigating legislative, regulatory and administrative compliance requirements.

Philip Whitmore – Partner, Cyber Security, KPMG

Philip leads KPMG's Cyber Security and Technology Risk practices in New Zealand. He has over 20 years practical experience in the provision of information systems assurance, information security advisory, IT risk management, physical security advisory and privacy risk management within New Zealand and through-out the Asia Pacific. He sits on the boards for a range of professional and industry organisations, including ISACA, ISC2 and the IT Special Interest Group for CAANZ.
