NATIONAL GOVERNANCE CONFERENCE 2016

Conference Programme

Welcome

Ngaio Merrick, Business Manager, Lewis Holdings

Opening address

Chris Luoni FCIS, FGNZ, President - Governance New Zealand

Morning keynote address

Why authentic leadership is no longer optional

Harold Hillman, Author and Leadership Coach

In our fast-paced world where the cycles of change are shorter, Harold Hillman makes the case that authentic leadership is now a fundamental requisite for success. Hillman deconstructs authenticity and how it applies to the leadership challenges in business. He will also discuss what companies can do to help authenticity thrive.

Afternoon keynote address

The seven skills of successful leaders

Stephanie Christopher, CEO – The Executive Connection

The session will focus on those areas that are critical to success for leaders in any organisation. Attendees will be able to rate themselves against each of the skill areas to identify their areas of strength and to understand their key gaps. By the end of the session they will have considered the first steps they need to take to close any gaps identified.

NATIONAL GOVERNANCE CONFERENCE 2016

Panel discussions

Leading organisations: the Board and CEO

Tony Caughey, Alison Patterson and Kevin Lowe

Essential risk management – a panel discussion

Rob Frost, Mark Micklefield and Robert Mannion

Chaired by Denis Mowbray

Breakout Session One (A)

SSP's – challenges and opportunities for NFP's

Wayne Tukiri, RSM New Zealand

Breakout Session One (B)

Global investment governance trends

David Cairns and Ross Fowler, MyFudiciary

Having recently presented at the Asian Development Bank – Update Conference in Fiji, Ross Fowler discusses global investment governance standards and their impact on New Zealand fiduciaries. Throughout the Asia Pacific region, including NZ and Australia, prevailing practices are being challenged and updated legislation being developed, but it is up to entities themselves to show leadership and move beyond broad principles and address the detail of sound investment practices. Increasing expectations, from many sources are being placed upon government entities, local bodies, superannuation funds, iwi and charities to meet global transparency standards and provide evidence of effective investment governance frameworks and processes.

David Cairns of MyFiduciary will co-present with Ross Fowler covering practical application of these trends in NZ.

NATIONAL GOVERNANCE CONFERENCE 2016

Breakout Session Two (A)

Charity accounts: key concepts for management and those charged with governance

Julia Fletcher, Charities Services

The first 15 minutes will briefly cover what the requirements are for charities in terms of their financial reports and the information that management will need to collect in order to prepare the reports. The second half will focus on how those charged with governance can interpret the reports and the questions they need to ask to ensure they are complying with the law.

Breakout Session Two (B)

Building an ethical organisation for business success

Jane Arnott, Institute of Business Ethics

'Desperately seeking compliance' is the attitude of many organisations as they focus on 'being legal' and safeguarding reputational capital.

Embedding business ethics relies on developing a culture where behaving with integrity and doing the right thing is paramount.

Are the two mutually exclusive?

Breakout Session Three (A)

Demystifying strategy – charting direction for your NFP

Shayne Blake, Independent Business Advisor

The process for development of a truly useful Board Strategic Plan can appear confusing, complicated and time consuming. Shayne will demonstrate a clear framework and useful tools which are freely available to NFP boards to assist with development of a succinct Statement of Strategic Intent and clear communication to management.

NATIONAL GOVERNANCE CONFERENCE 2016

Breakout Session Three (B)

Building stakeholder value

Bruce will lead a series of questions for 30 minutes - there are no answers, just opinions and observations including but not limited to:

- Should, boards lead business, if so what form should that leadership take, if not why not?
- If boards lead, is it effective? If ineffective why?
- What does leadership failure look like? Does it matter, if so what is the response?
- Does the style of leadership change over time - is it different in a start-up, and SME a large corporate issue, a SOE?
- Does leadership change between expansion and success and failure and threat? If so how do board adapt quickly?

Plus more....

Breakout Session Four (A)

Building capability – a case study

Shelley Campbell, Chief Executive – Sir Peter Blake Trust

Breakout Session Four (B)

Start-up governance: a new frontier, or the wild west?

Debra Hall, Independent Director

They say that starting a business is like jumping off a cliff, and building an aeroplane on the way down.

What, then, is the role of the board in a start-up venture, and how do directors contribute to giving that aeroplane the best chance of flying, while still fulfilling their fiduciary duty?

Debra will use real life case studies to illustrate the realities of start-up governance, and the challenges for directors in balancing the very near and present risks with the vision of building big and building fast to deliver value to the founders and the early stage investors. This is a practical discussion of how start-up boards actually work, and why early stage directors are willing to take on these roles that many perceive to be too risky.
